SPEAKER BIO

Col. Roy V. Rockwell
Commander, Space Delta 6, Schriever AFB, CO

Col. Roy V. Rockwell is the Commander of Delta 6, headquartered at Schriever Air Force Base, Colorado. As commander, he is responsible for nearly 1,000 active-duty military, Department of Defense civilian and contractor personnel.

The group provides assured access to space and cyberspace through the worldwide $6.8 billion Air Force Satellite Control Network while providing critical information to the nation's warfighters through the Global Broadcast Service. The group plans, programs, integrates, operates and maintains command and control and common-user systems in support of U.S. Space Command, U.S Air Force Warfare Center, Missile Defense Agency and the Peterson-Schriever Garrison missions. Additionally, the group is responsible for the $100 million Communications and Information gateway and mission system cyber defense.

Rockwell earned his commission through ROTC upon graduation from East Carolina University in August 1997.

He is a two-time graduated squadron commander, having commanded the 561st Network Operations Squadron and the 386th Expeditionary Communications Squadron. He has completed staff assignments with United States Africa Command, Headquarters Air Force and three Air Force major commands. He has also served in a variety of duty positions within the cyberspace and communications career field to include special assistant to the Air Force Space Command commander for cyberspace senior officer matters, wing director of staff, wing executive officer, network operations and security center chief, squadron director of operations, Intercontinental Ballistic Missile launch control systems programmer and space surveillance training system programmer.
